Photo guide for online consultations with Anna Deli

Important notes:

- Give your horse time to get into a comfortable and natural position. Do not pull the horse, but let it relax

- For the full body photos: If the horse does not to relax on the cross-ties or leads rope, take a photo of the horse is resting in the paddock. Remove the blanket if the horse is standing in the blanket

- The hooves should be photographed when the camera is on the ground level or/and in direct projection on the hoof, except for isometric views

- Make sure the hooves are clean so that all details are visible, and that all leg and hoof guards are removed

- The best surface to photograph on is a hard, solid surface such as concrete, wood flooring, asphalt, or the like

Full body pictures

- Take the following full body photographs:

The yellow illustration shows the plane on which you should hold and focus your camera when taking the photo

Photos of the hooves

Photograph each hoof in the following projections:

- Hooves should be photographed when the camera is on the ground level and in direct projection on the hoof, i.e., not at an angle
- The ideal distance is 50-70 cm from the hoof to avoid optical distortions

Photos of the hooves

Take photos of each hoof in the following projections:

- The photo of the hoof solar view should be taken in the straight projection onto the sole
-
- Ideal distance 30-40 cm

Isometric view of the hoof:

- Please use one of the following projections

- Ideal distance 30-40 cm

Photos of the hooves

Take photos of each hoof in the following projections

Photos of the hoof in the heel view:

- Hold the leg at the fetlock or above the fetlock. The leg should be relaxed

- Ideal distance 30-40 cm

- Insert both pictures of the heel view as shown

Additional info

It will be helpful to get these as well:

- Recent radiographs
- Video of the horse in motion with and without a rider
- The history of the horse
- Details of diet and supplementation
- Lifestyle of the horse

Contacts to send photos:

EMAIL: annahoofcare@hotmail.com
WhatsApp: +35799906057

First I will check the history and photos received, and give you a brief feedback whether I can help online or not.

Best regards and healthy hooves,
Anna Deli